▼ Define the Discriminator Architecture

Both D_X and D_Y have the same architecture, so we only need to define one class, and later instantiate two discriminators.

We use a kernel size of 4x4 and use that to determine the correct stride and padding size for each layer. This Stanford resource may also help in determining stride and padding sizes.

- Define your convolutional layers in `__init__`
- Then fill in the forward behavior of the network

The `forward` function defines how an input image moves through the discriminator, and the most important thing is to pass it through your convolutional layers in order, with a ReLU activation function applied to all but the last layer.

We should not apply a sigmoid activation function to the output, here, and that is because we are planning on using a squared error loss for training.

1 class Discriminator(nn.Module):
2
3     def __init__(self, conv_dim=64):
4         super(Discriminator, self).__init__()
5
6         # Define all convolutional layers
7         # Should accept an RGB image as input and output a single value
8         self.layer_1 = conv(3,conv_dim,4,batch_norm = False)
9         self.layer_2 = conv(conv_dim,conv_dim*2,4)
10        self.layer_3 = conv(conv_dim*2,conv_dim*4,4)
11        self.layer_4 = conv(conv_dim*4,conv_dim*8,4)
12        self.layer_5 = conv(conv_dim*8,1,4,1,batch_norm = False)
13
14    def forward(self, x):
15        # define feedforward behavior
16        x = F.relu(self.layer_1(x))
17        x = F.relu(self.layer_2(x))
18        x = F.relu(self.layer_3(x))
19        x = F.relu(self.layer_4(x))
20
21        x = self.layer_5(x)
22

▼ Generators

The generators, `G_XtoY` and `G_YtoX` (sometimes called F), are made of an encoder, a conv net that is responsible for turning an image into a smaller feature representation, and a decoder, a `transpose_conv` net that is responsible for turning that representation into an transformed image.

This network sees a 128x128x3 image, compresses it into a feature representation as it goes through three convolutional layers and reaches a series of residual blocks. It goes through a few (typically 6 or more) of these residual blocks, then it goes through three transpose convolutional layers (sometimes called de-conv layers) which upsample the output of the resnet blocks and create a new image!

Note that most of the convolutional and transpose-convolutional layers have BatchNorm and ReLu functions applied to their outputs with the exception of the final transpose convolutional layer, which has a `tanh` activation function applied to the output. Also, the residual blocks are made of convolutional and batch normalization layers, which we'll go over in more detail, next.

► Residual Block Class

To define the generators, you're expected to define a `ResidualBlock` class which will help you connect the encoder and decoder portions of the generators. You might be wondering, what exactly is a Resnet block?

ResNet blocks rely on connecting the output of one layer with the input of an earlier layer. The motivation for this structure is as follows: very deep neural networks can be difficult to train. Deeper networks are more likely to have vanishing or exploding gradients and, therefore, have trouble reaching convergence; batch normalization helps with this a bit. However, during training, we often see that deep networks respond with a kind of training degradation. Essentially, the training accuracy stops improving and gets saturated at some point during training. In the worst cases, deep models would see their training accuracy actually worsen over time!

One solution to this problem is to use Resnet blocks that allow us to learn so-called residual functions as they are applied to layer inputs. You can read more about this proposed architecture in the paper, Deep Residual Learning for Image Recognition by Kaiming He et. al

Residual Functions

Usually, when we create a deep learning model, the model (several layers with activations applied) is responsible for learning a mapping, `M`, from an input `x` to an output `y`.

$$M(x) = y \text{ (Equation 1)}$$

Instead of learning a direct mapping from `x` to `y`, we can instead define a residual function

▼ Pre-processing: scaling from -1 to 1

We need to do a bit of pre-processing; we know that the output of our `tanh` activated generator will contain pixel values in a range from -1 to 1, and so, we need to rescale our training images to a range of -1 to 1. (Right now, they are in a range from 0-1.)

▼ Define the Model

A CycleGAN is made of two discriminator and two generator networks.

Discriminators

The discriminators, D_X and D_Y , in this CycleGAN are convolutional neural networks that see an image and attempt to classify it as real or fake. In this case, real is indicated by an output close to 1 and fake as close to 0.

This network sees a 128x128x3 image, and passes it through 5 convolutional layers that downsample the image by a factor of 2. The first four convolutional layers have a BatchNorm and ReLu activation function applied to their output, and the last acts as a classification layer that outputs one value.

Convolutional Helper Function

To define the discriminators, you're expected to use the provided `conv` function, which creates a convolutional layer + an optional batch norm layer.

```

1 import torch.nn as nn
2 import torch.nn.functional as F
3
4 # helper conv function
5 def conv(in_channels, out_channels, kernel_size, stride=2, padding=1, batch_norm=True):
6     """Creates a convolutional layer, with optional batch normalization.
7     """
8     layers = []
9     conv_layer = nn.Conv2d(in_channels=in_channels, out_channels=out_channels, 10                           kernel_size=kernel_size, stride=stride, padding=padding)
11    if batch_norm:
12        layers.append(nn.BatchNorm2d(out_channels))
13    layers.append(nn.ReLU())
14    conv_layer = nn.Sequential(*layers)
15    return conv_layer

$$F(x) = M(x) - x$$

This looks at the difference between a mapping applied to x and the original input, x . $F(x)$ is typically, two convolutional layers + normalization layer and a ReLu in between. These convolutional layers should have the same number of inputs as outputs. This mapping can then be written as the following; a function of the residual function and the input x . The addition step creates a kind of loop that connects the input x to the output, y :

$$M(x) = F(x) + x \text{ (Equation 2) or}$$

$$y = F(x) + x \text{ (Equation 3)}$$

Optimizing a Residual Function

The idea is that it is easier to optimize this residual function $F(x)$ than it is to optimize the original mapping $M(x)$. Consider an example; what if we want $y = x$?

From our first, direct mapping equation, Equation 1, we could set $M(x) = x$ but it is easier to solve the residual equation $F(x) = 0$, which, when plugged in to Equation 3, yields $y = x$.

Defining the ResidualBlock Class

To define the `ResidualBlock` class, we'll define residual functions (a series of layers), apply them to an input x and add them to that same input. This is defined just like any other neural network, with an `__init__` function and the addition step in the `forward` function.

In our case, you'll want to define the residual block as:

- Two convolutional layers with the same size input and output
- Batch normalization applied to the outputs of the convolutional layers
- A ReLu function on the output of the first convolutional layer

Then, in the `forward` function, add the input x to this residual block. Feel free to use the helper `conv` function from above to create this block.

[ ] ↴ 1 cell hidden
```

► Transpose Convolutional Helper Function

To define the generators, you're expected to use the above `conv` function, `ResidualBlock` class, and the below `deconv` helper function, which creates a transpose convolutional layer + an optional batchnorm layer.

```
[ ] ↴ 1 cell hidden
```

► Define the Generator Architecture

- The `__init__` function with the specified 3 layer encoder convolutional net, a series of residual blocks (the number of which is given by `n_res_blocks`), and then a 3 layer decoder transpose convolutional net.
- Then complete the `forward` function to define the forward behavior of the generators. Recall that the last layer has a `tanh` activation function.

Both G_{XtoY} and G_{YtoX} have the same architecture, so we only need to define one class, and ~~later instantiate two generators~~

```

1 class CycleGenerator(nn.Module):
2
3     def __init__(self, conv_dim=64, n_res_blocks=6):
4         super(CycleGenerator, self).__init__()
5
6         # 1. Define the encoder part of the generator
7         self.layer_1 = conv(3,conv_dim,4)
8         self.layer_2 = conv(conv_dim,conv_dim*2,4)
9         self.layer_3 = conv(conv_dim*2,conv_dim*4,4)
10        # 2. Define the resnet part of the generator
11        layers = []
12        for n in range(n_res_blocks):
13            layers.append(ResidualBlock(conv_dim*4))
14        self.res_blocks = nn.Sequential(*layers)
15        # 3. Define the decoder part of the generator
16        self.layer_4 = deconv(conv_dim*4,conv_dim*2,4)
17        self.layer_5 = deconv(conv_dim*2,conv_dim,4)
18        self.layer_6 = deconv(conv_dim,3,4,batch_norm = False)
19
20    def forward(self, x):
21        """Given an image x, returns a transformed image."""
22        # define feedforward behavior, applying activations as necessary
23
24        out = F.relu(self.layer_1(x))
25        out = F.relu(self.layer_2(out))
26        out = F.relu(self.layer_3(out))
27
28        out = self.res_blocks(out)
29
30        out = F.relu(self.layer_4(out))
31        out = F.relu(self.layer_5(out))
32        out = F.tanh(self.layer_6(out))
33
34        return out

▼ Create the complete network

Using the classes we defined earlier, you can define the discriminators and generators necessary to create a complete CycleGAN. The given parameters should work for training.

First, create two discriminators, one for checking if X sample images are real, and one for checking if Y sample images are real. Then the generators. Instantiate two of them, one for

11     print("-----")
12     print(G_YtoX)
13     print()
14
15     print("          D_X          ")
16     print("-----")
17     print(D_X)
18     print()
19
20     print("          D_Y          ")
21     print("-----")
22     print(D_Y)
23     print()
24
25
26 # print all of the models
27 print_models(G_XtoY, G_YtoX, D_X, D_Y)
```

1. Generate fake images that look like domain X based on real images in domain Y
2. Compute the generator loss based on how D_X responds to fake X
3. Generate reconstructed \hat{Y} images based on the fake X images generated in step 1
4. Compute the cycle consistency loss by comparing the reconstructions with real Y images
5. Repeat steps 1-4 only swapping domains
6. Add up all the generator and reconstruction losses and perform backpropagation + optimization

Saving Your Progress

A CycleGAN repeats its training process, alternating between training the discriminators and the generators, for a specified number of training iterations. You've been given code that will save some example generated images that the CycleGAN has learned to generate after a certain number of training iterations. Along with looking at the losses, these example generations should give you an idea of how well your network has trained.

Below, you may choose to keep all default parameters; your only task is to calculate the appropriate losses and complete the training cycle.

↳ Models moved to GPU.

▼ Check that we've implemented this correctly

The function `create_model` should return the two generator and two discriminator networks.

After we've defined these discriminator and generator components, it's good practice to check our work. The easiest way to do this is to print out your model architecture and read through it to make sure the parameters are what you expected. The next cell will print out their architectures.

► Define Loss Functions

To help us calculate the discriminator and generator losses during training, let's define some helpful loss functions. Here, we'll define three.

1. `real_mse_loss` that looks at the output of a discriminator and returns the error based on how close that output is to being classified as real. This should be a mean squared error.
2. `fake_mse_loss` that looks at the output of a discriminator and returns the error based on how close that output is to being classified as fake. This should be a mean squared error.
3. `cycle_consistency_loss` that looks at a set of real image and a set of reconstructed/generated images, and returns the mean absolute error between them. This has a `lambda_weight` parameter that will weight the mean absolute error in a batch.

It's recommended that you take a look at the original, CycleGAN paper to get a starting value for `lambda_weight`.

► Define the Optimizers

Next, let's define how this model will update its weights. This, like the GANs you may have seen before, uses Adam optimizers for the discriminator and generator. It's again recommended that you take a look at the original, CycleGAN paper to get starting hyperparameter values.

▼ Training a CycleGAN

When a CycleGAN trains, and sees one batch of real images from set X and Y , it trains by performing the following steps:

Training the Discriminators

1. Compute the discriminator D_X loss on real images
2. Generate fake images that look like domain X based on real images in domain Y
3. Compute the fake loss for D_X
4. Compute the total loss and perform backpropagation and D_X optimization
5. Repeat steps 1-4 only with D_Y and your domains switched!

Training the Generators

▼ Tips on Training and Loss Patterns

A lot of experimentation goes into finding the best hyperparameters such that the generators and discriminators don't overpower each other. It's often a good starting point to look at existing papers to find what has worked in previous experiments, I'd recommend this DCGAN paper in addition to the original CycleGAN paper to see what worked for them. Then, you can try your own experiments based off of a good foundation.

Discriminator Losses

When you display the generator and discriminator losses you should see that there is always some discriminator loss; recall that we are trying to design a model that can generate good "fake" images. So, the ideal discriminator will not be able to tell the difference between real and fake images and, as such, will always have some loss. You should also see that D_X and D_Y are

As you trained this model, you may have chosen to sample and save the results of your generated images after a certain number of training iterations. This gives you a way to see whether or not your Generators are creating good fake images. For example, the image below depicts real images in the Y set, and the corresponding generated images during different points in the training process. You can see that the generator starts out creating very noisy, fake images, but begins to converge to better representations as it trains (though, not perfect).

Below, you've been given a helper function for displaying generated samples based on the iteration passed in training iteration

1 import matplotlib.image as mpimg
2
3 # helper visualization code
4 def view_samples(iteration, sample_dir='samples_cyclegan'):
5
6     # samples are named by iteration
7     path_XtoY = os.path.join(sample_dir, 'sample-{:06d}-X-Y.png'.format(iteration))
8     path_YtoX = os.path.join(sample_dir, 'sample-{:06d}-Y-X.png'.format(iteration))
9
10    # read in those samples
11    try:
12        x2y = mpimg.imread(path_XtoY)
13        y2x = mpimg.imread(path_YtoX)
14    except:
15        print('Invalid number of iterations.')
16
17    fig, (ax1, ax2) = plt.subplots(figsize=(18,20), nrows=2, ncols=1, sharey=True)
18    ax1.imshow(x2y)
19    ax1.set_title('X to Y')
20    ax2.imshow(y2x)
21    ax2.set_title('Y to X')
22
```

```
1 # view samples at iteration 100
2 view_samples(100, 'samples_cyclegan')
```

→

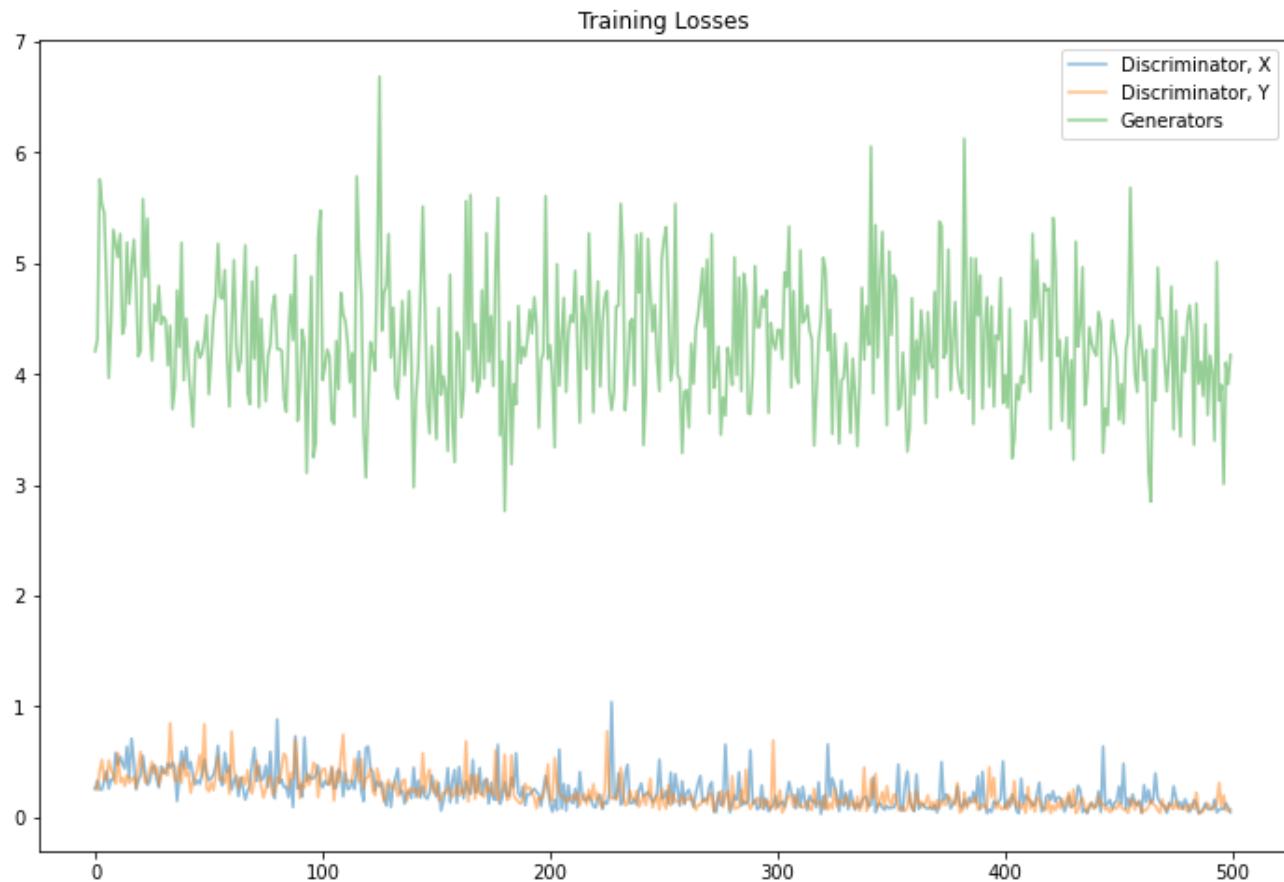

roughly at the same loss levels; if they are not, this indicates that your training is favoring one type of discriminator over the other and you may need to look at biases in your models or data.

Generator Loss

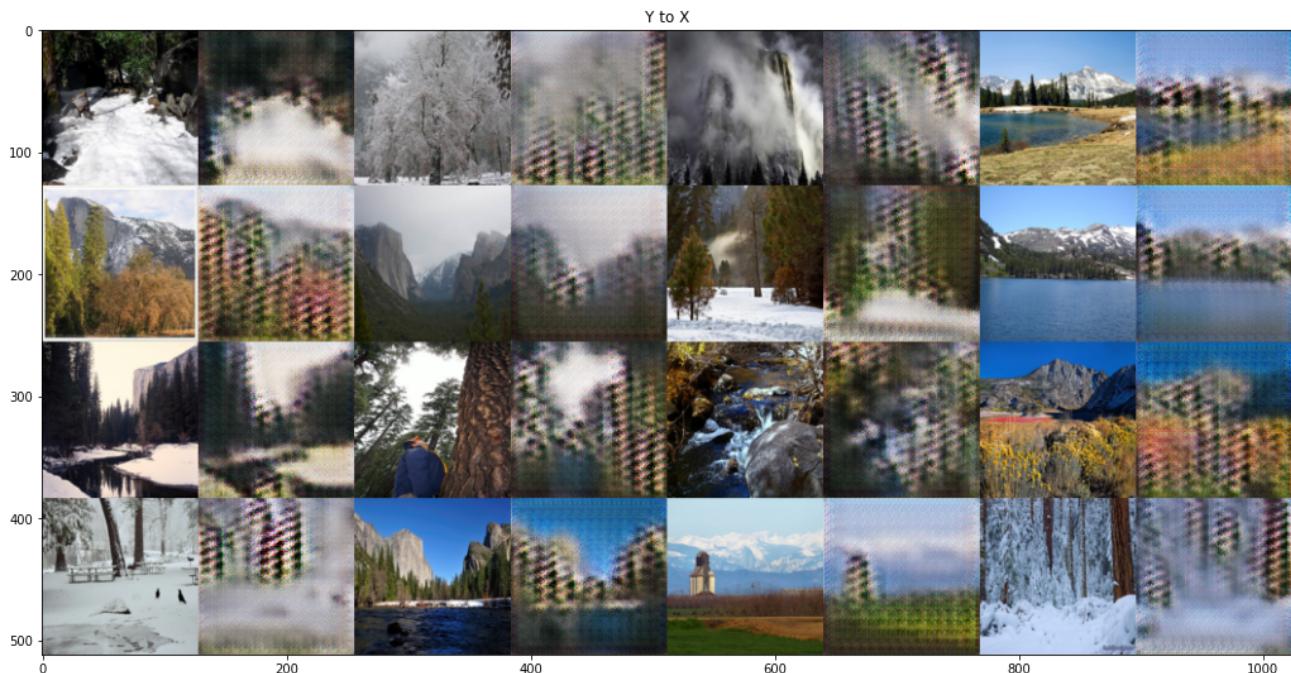

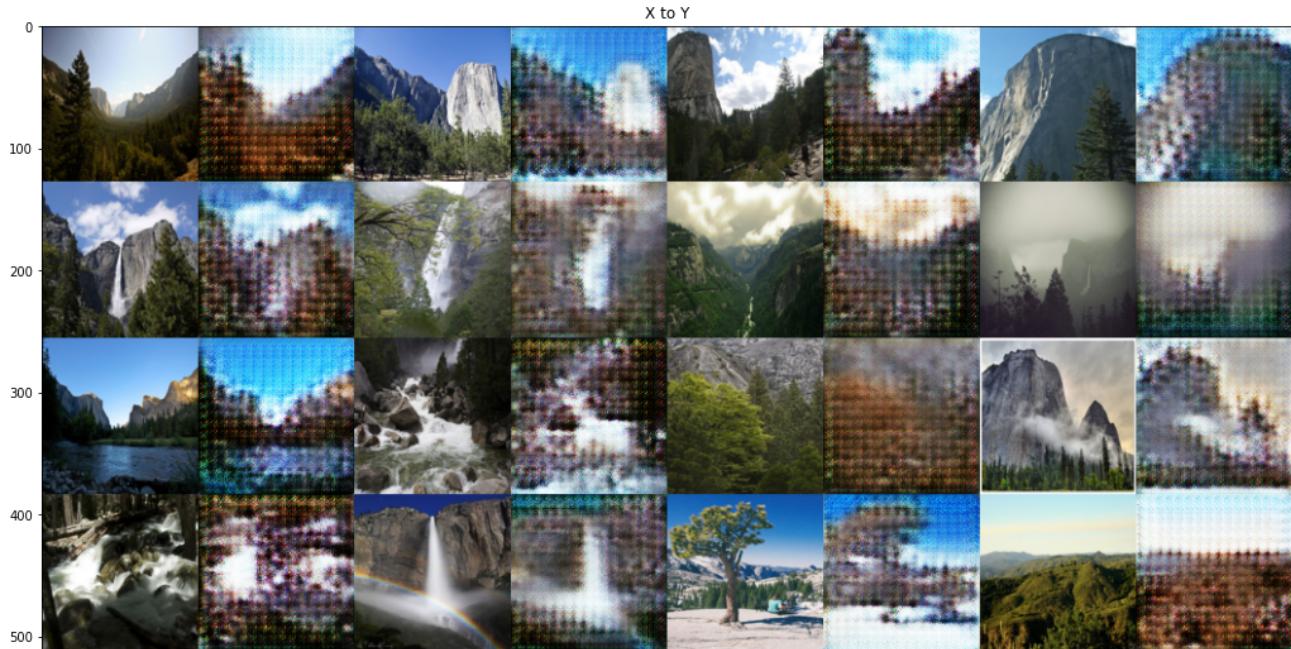

The generator's loss should start significantly higher than the discriminator losses because it is accounting for the loss of both generators and weighted reconstruction errors. You should see this loss decrease a lot at the start of training because initial generated images are often far-off from being good fakes. After some time it may level off; this is normal since the generator and discriminator are both improving as they train. If you see that the loss is jumping around a lot, over time, you may want to try decreasing your learning rates or changing your cycle consistency

```
1 fig, ax = plt.subplots(figsize=(12,8))
2 losses = np.array(losses)
3 plt.plot(losses.T[0], label='Discriminator, X', alpha=0.5)
4 plt.plot(losses.T[1], label='Discriminator, Y', alpha=0.5)
5 plt.plot(losses.T[2], label='Generators', alpha=0.5)
6 plt.title("Training Losses")
7 plt.legend()
```

↳ <matplotlib.legend.Legend at 0x7f5f1a03e278>

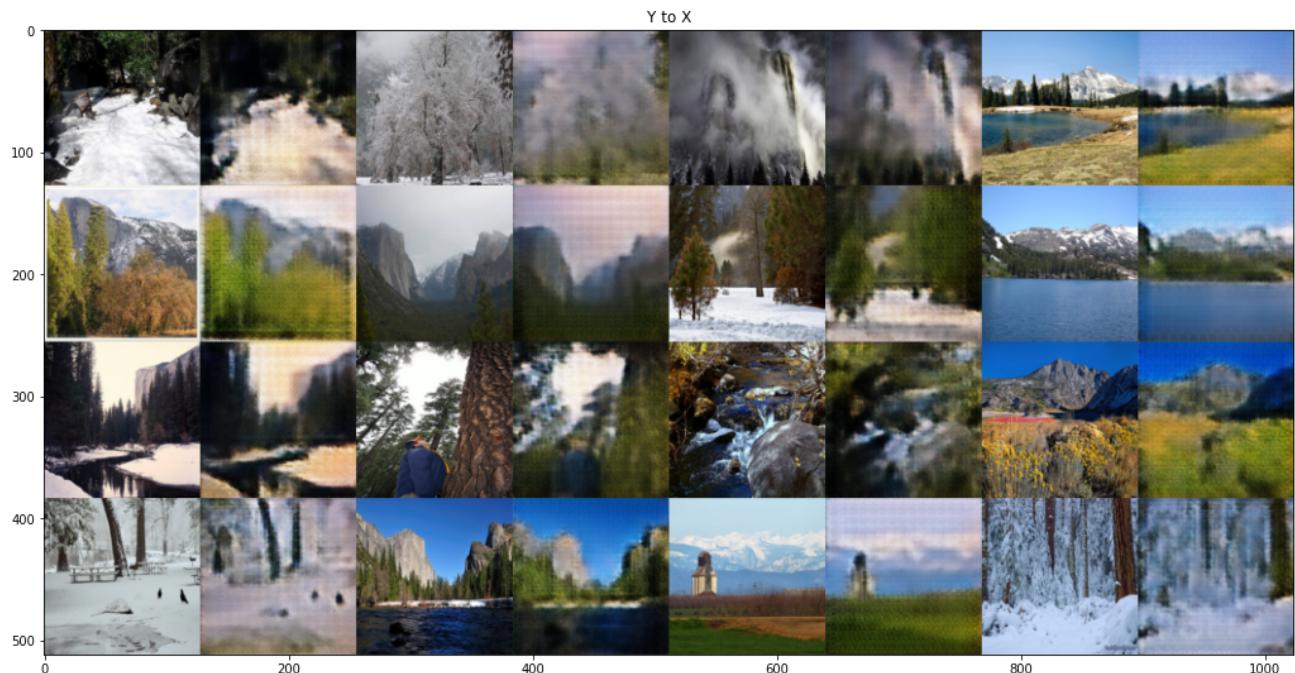

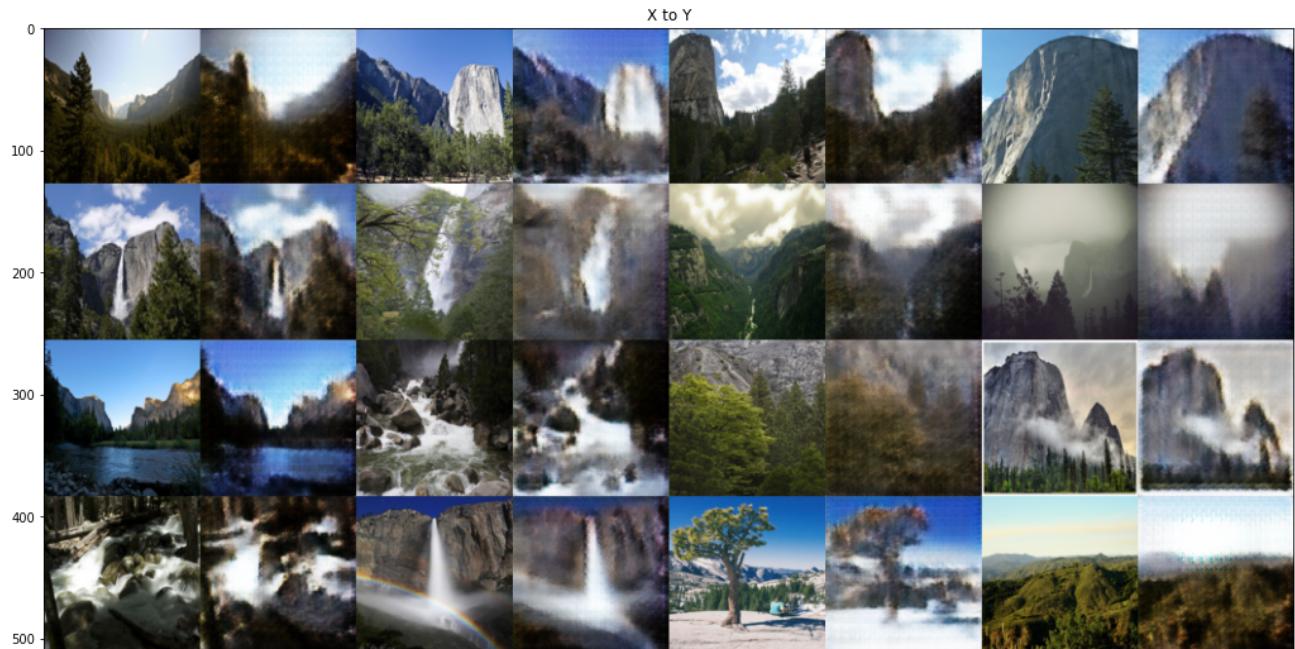

▼ Evaluate the Result!

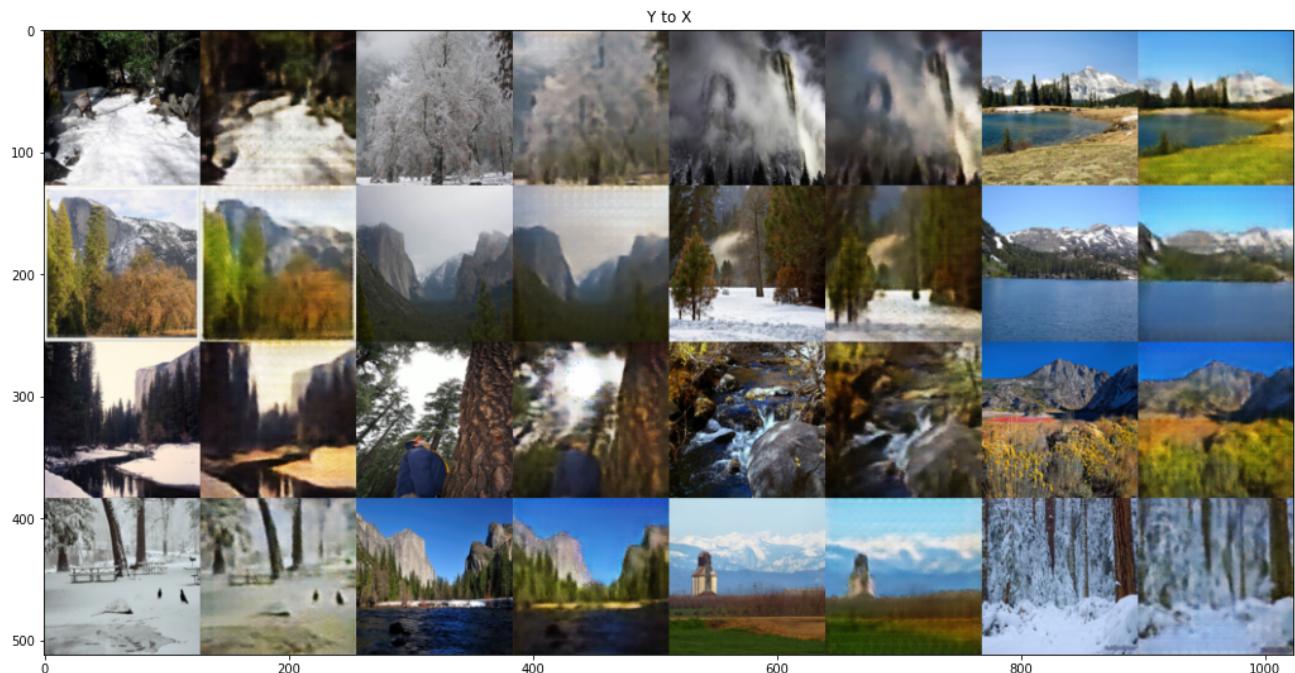

```
1 # view samples at iteration 1000
2 view_samples(1000, 'samples_cyclegan')
```

→

```
! view_samples(5000, 'samples_cyclegan')
```
